NSPIRE: EVERYDAY PEOPLE CHANGING NEW JERSEY partners the non-profit organizations New Jersey Heroes, which I founded in 2010, and the Drumthwacket Foundation of which my husband, the Governor, proudly serves as Honorary Chairperson and I serve as President. The Drumthwacket Foundation commissioned nine New Jersey fine art photographers to photograph eighteen individuals honored by New Jersey Heroes. The resulting eighteen black and white portraits captured through the lens of professional photographers Aubrey J. Kauffman, Kay Kenny, Donald Lokuta, Geanna Merola, Klaus Schnitzer, Robin Schwartz, Jay Seldin, Bruce M. White and Wendel A. White celebrate these remarkable individuals whose hard work and tireless efforts inspire New Jerseyans to give back to their community. The exhibit furthers the Drumthwacket Foundation's fine arts initiative launched in 2012 to curate historical and contemporary exhibits which recognize New Jersey's rich cultural heritage and raise pride in our wonderful state.

I hope you enjoy the exhibit and your visit to Drumthwacket.

Rod Hirsch, Founder, Operation Shoebox NJ

When Rod was an Eagle Scout in 1969, he had friends who were sent over to serve in Vietnam. He chose then to do a service project, sending care packages to his friends and other troops who were overseas. The idea came back to him to start up again 36 years later and Operation Shoebox New Jersey was born. He recognized that the simple gesture of a care package really means everything to a service member who is far away from their family and friends. Through Operation Shoebox he is making a difference in the lives of our military personnel every day. Since its inception in 2005, Operation Shoebox has sent over 95,000 care packages to our troops in the Middle East.

Alan Weinstein, Volunteer, Community Soup Kitchen & Outreach Center, Morristown

The Community Soup Kitchen feeds on average 100-350 people every day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year... that's over 10,000 consecutive days working to help others since they opened their doors in 1984. The numbers are staggering and show the extreme importance of the Soup Kitchen. Alan, the former owner of the Park Savoy, would donate unused food the hall had to the Soup Kitchen. When he retired, he asked them if he could help volunteer in any other way. When he learned that due to new restrictions, the Soup Kitchen was unable to accept perishable food donations from individuals and only from restaurants and caterings halls, he went to work using his contacts in the field and started the Kitchen to Kitchen Program. Through this program, local restaurants and catering halls are able to donate unused food, as well as any pre-made food (like soups), directly to the Soup Kitchen for distribution to their guests. This program single-handedly kept the Soup Kitchen's doors open and the food collected accounts for over 60% of the food they serve.

Abby Daly, Founder, Bridge of Books Foundation

Bridge of Books provides an ongoing source of books to underprivileged and at-risk children throughout New Jersey in order to support literacy skills and to encourage a love of reading. The organization's name comes from the belief that a book, like a bridge, can take a child to new places. Founder Abby Daly saw an overwhelming need for books in many areas of our state. As something many of us take for granted, she wanted to find a way to be able to provide for those children who may not even own a single book. Through donations and book drives, Bridge of Books has been able to facilitate the distribution of over 600,000 books since its launch in 2003.

Alex DePalma, Founder, Brick Stars Challenger Program

After being a hockey coach for some 25 years, Alex DePalma felt he was ready for a new challenge. Recognizing the large number of children and adults with developmental disabilities in our state, Alex founded in 2009 the Brick Stars Challenger Program to introduce this group of citizens to his favorite sport. However, what may have started out as a fun way to bring hockey to individuals with disabilities, quickly grew into a life changing program. Participants become more animated and talkative and maintain better focus in their daily lives. They become physically stronger and develop more confidence. The program teaches coordination, strength, endurance, and motivation which helps with their independence. Brick Stars Challenger Program is the fastest growing special needs ice hockey program in NJ.

Diane Taylor, Founder, Pass It Along

Diane was inspired to start Pass It Along in 2001 after a group of neighborhood teenagers asked her to help them collect food for a local food pantry. She realized there were a number of young people in her immediate community who had excellent ideas for community service activities and volunteerism, but just needed some adult guidance and the appropriate tools to get the ball rolling. So with that, she decided to leave her full time job and start Pass It Along, a non-profit that gives young people the opportunity to plan, execute, lead, and participate in initiatives to bring about positive change in their community and state. This model has allowed Pass It Along to start and continue numerous programs that help a wide array of needs.

Pony Power Therapies provides horse assisted activities to children and adults with autism, cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis, emotional disabilities, disabled veterans, at-risk youth, and so many others. Through therapeutic riding, these participants are able to gain a sense of mental clarity, physical exercise, core strengthening, and sensory input. It also gives them a sense of accomplishment, patience, self-esteem and pride. Being a lifelong equestrian, Dana Spett discovered the therapeutic riding field while researching alternatives therapies for one of her daughters with mild special needs. Recognizing the benefits, Dana started Pony Power Therapies in 2000 with just four riders and one horse, housed at a local barn. By their third year of operation, they purchased Three Sisters Farm after they had maxed out of the space they were in. They now have 20 horses on the farm, 175 clients, and over 150 volunteers.

JAY SELDIN

“I am a teacher, photographer, and world traveler. I am a curious person and a teller of tales.” As a social documentary photographer, and environmental portrait photographer, my goal is to capture a moment in the lives of individual people, families or groups I’ve encountered on my journeys. I hope that the viewer will find an interesting story in the images that I have captured.

The ‘Heros’ that I have met for this project are truly distinguished members of our NJ communities. Both Melina Garcia and Gian Paul dedicate themselves to the children and families in their local communities. I applaud their efforts helping and giving back to those that need it most, our children.

I have been exhibiting my photos for more than 30 years nationally and internationally and have received several awards and grants from the following: The Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation, Adobe Photoshop competition winner, Distinguished Educators Award from Rochester Institute of Technology.

I am sponsored by the international paper company Canson-Infinity as one of their photography ambassadors, as well as BlackRapid Photo gear. I own and operate a photo travel workshop company specializing in bringing students to various developing countries to document and experience cultures and lifestyles. I’ve held the position of “artist-in-residence” for the Newark Art Museum and the Montclair Art Museum for several years. Currently, a faculty member at The International Center for Photography (ICP) in NYC.

Gian Paul Gonzalez, Founder, Hope + Future

Gian Paul was the forward for Montclair State University basketball team during his time in college. In his junior year, he started an organization called 4-One which motivates at-risk youth throughout NJ through the game of basketball, inspiring pride and self-esteem in kids who need it the most. Upon graduating from Montclair State, Gian Paul had the opportunity to play professional basketball for the NBA. However, he decided to give up that dream for another one. He came back to his hometown of Union City to be a high school teacher. He felt that instead of giving his neighborhood kids a celebrity to look up to, it would serve them better to have a real in-person role model that they were able to spend time with every day. Using the 4-One model, Gian Paul started the Hope+Future Foundation which includes athletic training, mentoring clubs, health and nutrition education, an intramural basketball league, and assigned academic study periods to assist personal growth and improve young lives.

Melina García, Founder, Union City Music Project

Melina is a Venezuela native who immigrated to Brooklyn with her mother at a young age. While in Brooklyn, she would pass the Brooklyn Conservatory everyday on her way to school, but unfortunately could not afford to attend. This was the second time Melina was unable to join a music program, as a similar program in her native country had run out of instruments by the time Melina was old enough to join. This would later inspire Melina to give the opportunity she missed as a child to others. Melina was living in Union City when she and her husband decided to start a family. They thought about moving to a better neighborhood to raise their children. However, she began to feel that if everyone with the means left Union City the way she had planned, there would be no one there to make a difference in the lives of the youth in the city she loved. She felt a calling to stay and make a difference. She started the Union City Music Project – an after school program designed to keep young people off the streets and teach them how to play a musical instrument in the process.

Mike Ruane & Erika Rech, Co-Founders, Breast Intentions

When they were just 15 years old, cousins Mike Ruane and Erika Rech started Breast Intentions when two family members including Erika's mom, were diagnosed with breast cancer within months of one another. Throughout diagnosis and treatment, Erika and Mike witnessed firsthand the devastating effect that cancer can have on a family. They vowed to form an organization to help families navigate through a cancer diagnosis by providing resources and emotional and financial support. They started fundraising at their local church and shopping center, with the proceeds going directly to the women who needed it. They helped pay women's mortgages, electric and heating bills, costs for wigs, and even school supplies for some of their children. Today, Breast Intentions has raised almost $1 million and is operating chapters in New York, Illinois, and Massachusetts.

Jodina Hicks, Executive Director, UrbanPromise

UrbanPromise started in 1988 as a summer camp for at-risk youth in Camden, New Jersey. In 25 years, they have expanded to now include an after school program for over 400 children throughout Camden, job training, experimental learning, and a host of other programs that challenge the youth to develop and realize their potential. Jodina came to UrbanPromise in 1988 as an 18-year old college student at Eastern University who wanted to volunteer her time to help to shape the lives of the young people in Camden. She felt a strong calling to help the community, so much so that she moved into Camden herself to be closer to the young people she served. During her senior year of college, Jodina took 3 students from the UrbanPromise program that were in very poor familial circumstances into her home and raised them as her own. One of them was only in 8th grade at the time. Jodina helped her finish high school, go to college, get her masters, and she is now the Vice Principal of Camden Forward, the UrbanPromise K-8 school. Jodina played an integral role in helping build the ministry of UrbanPromise, creating the StreetLeader Program, a dynamic teen employment and leadership initiative, and the UrbanPromise Academy, a high school, which has become a last chance educational opportunity for the most vulnerable teens in Camden.

Aidan McManus, Founder, Food Dude

Aidan was 5 years old when he saw a homeless man on the street. It was then and there he decided he would dedicate himself to helping those who were hungry. He drew comic books, planned movie and pizza night fundraisers, and did various chores to make money to donate to his local soup kitchen, Ladle of Love. By the time Aidan was 8 years old, he had raised over $1000 to help Ladle of Love. Desiring to do more, Aidan started the nonprofit organization Food Dude to help provide food to families in his community by working together with other organizations to ease hunger in South Jersey. Aidan makes speeches at churches and schools to let kids know that no matter how young, they can make a difference.

Clark and Jean Paradise, Co-Founders, Your Grandmother's Cupboard

Both in their 80s, Clark and Jean Paradise started bringing blankets, clothing, and portable heaters to people living in a nearby tent-city community. When they learned that these individuals were lacking personal care items like soap, shampoo, toothpaste and toilet paper, they added these items to their list. They then discovered that there were many families in their area living in motel rooms and barely getting by. So through various donations of time, money, and supplies from their fellow NJ residents, Clark and Jean founded the mobile outreach program Your Grandmother's Cupboard to bring food, clothing, and personal supplies to people lacking transportation to access traditional food pantries and clothing depots. Today, Clark and Jean serve over 4,000 people per month, bringing their trailers full of donated items to various soup kitchens, shelters, and motels across the state.
